Meet the Muslim Myth Buster

(Washington, DC / January 15) -- Sam Mak, an American of Muslim descent and an experienced diversity and multicultural trainer and facilitator. She has experience life as an American Muslim from being bussed in grade school to attending private Catholic high school, and working as an entrepreneur. She candidly walks you through key basic information that everyone interacting with Muslims or watching the news must know – especially if you are an American.

According to the FBI data compiled by Princeton University's Loon Watch, Islamist extremists were responsible for just 6 percent of terrorist attacks between 1980 and 2005 — falling behind Latino groups, Extreme left-wing groups, and Jewish extremists. Ms. Mak specializes in information about Muslim perceptions of the United States; Sam is well versed in the history of the region, politics of competing factions, religion, culture, and most importantly their perceptions of you and how they may impact you. You may be surprised by how much there is in common between Islam, Christianity, and Judaism.

Join Sam as she walks you through underlying perceptions within the Muslim community that if you knew would give you an edge – allowing you to feel empowered and less fearful of your Muslim neighbors. In addition to sharing valuable historic and cultural information, Ms. Mak will answer your frank questions and provide you with a Muslim perspective. Ms. Mak is noted for her engaging and candid training on Bridging the gap between Muslims and America.

Talking Points for Sam Mak:

What does the Quran really say about Jews and Christians?

Why would an educated successful American woman, be a Muslim?

Why does it seem like there are more Muslim criminals?

Is Islam oppressive to women?

Why do Muslim women cover their heads?

Currently, Islam is the fastest growing religion in the US and in the world (1). Why are so many individuals turning to Islam, despite the criminal events such as Paris
